

The Century Magazine
November begins the twentieth year of THE CENTURY MAGAZINE. The opening pages are devoted to a generous installment of the long-expected autobiography of Joseph Jefferson. Jefferson begins the account of his life by a description of his "playhouse"; namely, "behind the scenes" of a theater. "And what a playhouse it was," says the author, "full of all sorts of material for the exercise of my youthful imagination!" He presents the most frank and humorous recollections of his childhood; he describes Chicago and the West in 1838 and 1839; a significant adventure at the home of Lincoln, Springfield Ill.; and the voyage of his family in a flatboat. He also gives his recollections of James Wallack, Sr., the elder Booth, and Macready. The illustrations are numerous and include portraits of Jefferson, himself, his parents and grandfather, Tyrone Power, James Wallack, Macready, and Junius Brutus Booth.

The same number begins several other serials; notably, Mrs. Barr's novel, "Friend Olivia," in which it is evident that the selfish and fascinating Anatasia is to divide with the saintly Olivia the interest of the story. The scene is laid in Cromwell's time, and Cromwell and Fox figure in the plot.

An Interesting Report to the Citizens of Kirksville.

Harry Ogden Recovers the Use of his Limbs.

Last fall I was a great sufferer from rheumatism in my left shoulder and hip. I was confined to my bed for some time and could walk only with crutches for a month. After using several remedies, and failing to get any relief, I began using Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup and continuing its use one month I could walk without crutches, and to-day am a well man. Yours truly,
